People Wasting Cell Phone Minutes and Money

(IRN)-Illinoisans could spend less on their cell phone bills.

The Citizens Utility Board analyzed a year's worth of results from the CUB cell phone saver, in which people upload their phone bills and the program tells them where they could have saved.

CUB Director David Kolata says the biggest problem is people have plans that give them way more minutes than they use.

"The cell phone saver revealed that nine out of ten callers on individual plans paid for 450 minutes or more even though most of those callers never used more than 300 minutes a month, and 30 percent used less than 100 minutes."

Kolata says the cell phone industry should offer medium sized plans that suit customer's needs better and offer something else in exchange for unused minutes.
